

Our understanding of the natural world roots and connects us

The annual Girls & Science event at the Denver Museum of Nature and Science

When you think of culture, what do you include? Maybe the traditions and holidays your family holds dear. Or your favorite works of art hanging in a museum or gallery. Or the festivals and events we celebrate as a collective each spring, summer and fall.

Do you add to this list foundational contributions made to us by the natural sciences and natural history? Maybe not.

But these “disciplines” function just like the more typical arts and culture experience we might include. The natural sciences and natural history ground us in a deeper understanding of who we are and where we come from, in all the richness of our diversity. They inform our current state of being and connect us to the natural world all around us. And the clarity of the information they offer can also illuminate possible paths forward. Organizations who provide this critical element to our larger understanding of culture have been elemental to the SCFD since its inception.

As we prepare to celebrate Earth Day, the SCFD honors the contributions of the dozens of organizations it funds whose scientific missions educate, enhance and illuminate our understanding of the world around us.

Board Spotlight

To help you learn a little more about the leadership of the district, we'll be featuring a brief spotlight on each of our current members of the SCFD Board of Directors. SCFD board members represent each of the district's seven-member counties and are appointed by the county commissioners in their county. In addition, the governor appoints four members.
