ART that includes all creatives

Stevie and Corey, both accomplished artists, don't use conventional methods to make their art. They can't.

But what the two artists and others like them who are living with disabilities can do is use the technique Artistic Realization Technologies (A.R.T.) to realize their artistic vision. Pieces created with the process have recently been sold as part of Access Gallery's corporate commission for Modivcare, a Denver Tech Center-based company that provides transportation options for people who use Medicaid and Medicare for health insurance. For nearly 50 years, Access Gallery has been a creative home for individuals living with disabilities, many of whom sell their work through the gallery's gift shop or through corporate and non-profit commissions secured through the gallery.

The A.R.T. process uses conventional and unconventional artistic tools as well as specific processes to support artists who often do not have full use of their hands as well as many who are only semi verbal or not able to verbalize at all. Each artist works with a tracker, an abled supporter who works to specifically express what is in the artist's head. Using creative processes that include laser pointers, color palettes, yard sticks and other simple devices, the tracker works to specifically render each artist's direction.

“The A.R.T process is set up so that the artist can completely translate their vision. The tracker keeps their influence out of the artwork,” said Louis Trujillo, Access Gallery Manager who is also a trained tracker for the process. “It gives them a voice in a world where they really don't get a voice a lot of the time. It allows them to make decisions in a world where they aren't always given the opportunity to make their own decisions.” Read more.

Know someone looking to get started with the arts?

The Diversity in the Arts Internship Program (DITA) is set to help people get their foot in the door, their face in the crowd, and their career off the ground. DITA is building a cohort of diverse arts and culture interns that will learn from and support the many art and culture nonprofits who are committed to faithfully representing the diverse Denver metro community. The program is a long-term approach to inclusiveness and equity that will not only welcome diverse students but greatly enhance the overall health of all of our art and culture organizations for everyone. Engage with Us

"Elevating the SCFD" Shout Out

As part of our ongoing work with you to help raise the profile of the SCFD for residents across the metro area, we'll be adding a hat tip to organizations who have found a way to include SCFD in their outreach. The goal is to highlight all the ways your organization and help.

Hat Tip to Arapahoe Philharmonic

As part of their regular newsletter, the Arapahoe Phil includes prominent placement of the SCFD logo, a visual reminder to their engaged network that #WeFundCulture.

Join the SCFD Team

If you are a communicator, we're looking to talk to you. The Scientific & Cultural Facilities District (SCFD) is looking for a Communications Manager to support efforts to increase awareness of the SCFD and advance its work through social media, marketing collateral, earned media, and events. Applications will be accepted and reviewed until Feb. 10. Learn more.

Register your Free Days with us

If you have days, programs, or events to share with the public, you can submit them for inclusion on the SCFD website. As we work toward more normal operations across 2022, we have reactivated this calendar, typically the most visited page on our site. Submit your Free Days.
